I am pleased to bring you this new issue of Health Inform, which covers a variety of new topics and insights. This edition of the publication has been a highly collaborative effort by an editorial group which has welcomed the valuable addition of new HLI committee member Harshanie Habarakadage (University of Melbourne).

The editorial team would like to thank Elizabeth Reale (Australian Nursing and Midwifery Federation) and Christine Ruddy (RMIT University) for their efforts in editing the articles in this issue, exemplifying the type of active membership needed to keep HLI dynamic and proactive.

We welcome a piece of original research conducted at Western Health by Kathryn Ritchie and Ilana Jackson on the crucial topic of usability and information seeking behaviour in the context of health library websites.

Maggie McCafferty from Albury-Wodonga provides an update on the latest continuous evolution of interlibrary lending network GratisNet from a committee perspective, including recent achievements and future initiatives on the horizon.

A large cohort of contributors provide a collective reflection on the sixth Australian Evidence-Based Librarians' Institute (AEBPLI) held at Flinders University in December 2016. This provides a point of comparison on differences and similarities with previous reviews of the Institute in past years, revealing how the EBP learning process has changed.

Last but not least, Laura Foley and John Prentice reflect on the experience of extensive outreach and engagement through promoting the Australian and New Zealand College of Anaesthetists (ANZCA) Library at the College's medical conference.

I look forward to developing the conference proceedings issue of Health Inform in Volume 26 No. 2 later this year. This year's HLI Conference will be held on Friday 20th October 2017 in Melbourne at the State Library of Victoria, to the theme of Through the Looking Glass - Reflections and Refractions in Health Libraries. The current call for abstracts closes on Friday 14th July.
